Daughters are increasingly assuming leadership roles at family firms. In this video, familybusiness.org Editor Kimberly Eddleston talks with two Northeastern University students who will join their family firms after graduation: Angelina Kljat, whose family runs an international agricultural company in Kazakhstan, and Joanna Jacob, whose family owns a large Indonesian shipping company. Both women talk about the expectations of their families back home, their worries and their hopes for the future. The takeaway: Figure out how you want to contribute, be confident and know your value.
